

WHAT IS HAKKA FOOD?

Not many people know what “Hakka” means, so we’d like to take the opportunity here to explain to you all about who we are and why our food is different from what many deem to be “traditional” and “authentic” Chinese food.

Because China is such a large country and is comprised of many regions, there are many groups of people who speak their own distinct dialect, use different types of ingredients specific to their region, and possess their own styles of cooking. There are fifty-six recognizable ethnic groups in China, and Hakka people are considered one of them. Historically, Hakka people are described as “wanderers” because we are constantly on the move, migrating from region to region. “Ke Jia” was a name given to us by Mandarin speakers and literally means, “House Guests”. Hakka cuisine is the perfect reflection of “Ke Jia” because our food has adopted different flavours from our regional hosts as well as exotic ingredients from our international hosts.

To be able to survive our countless migrations, the food that accompanied us on our long travels had to be easy to transport, have a long shelf life and be extremely tasty – thus was the creation of our traditional food staples: Dzaio Tsui (Fermented Rice Wine), Ham Tsoi Guan (Preserved Dried Mustard), and Fung Mi (Sweet Soy Sauce).

After centuries of migrations, our ancestors finally settled in Mei Xian, Guang Dong. Guang Dong is where we adopted Cantonese foods such as Ginger and Green Onion Lobster, Hot and Sour Soup and the art of Cantonese Stirfry.

Though Hakka food isn’t predominantly spicy, it has received the reputation as “Hot and Spicy” here in Toronto. The reason for this is because a large number of our people migrated to India and then immigrated to Toronto in the 70s. A group of us opened restaurants and that’s how spicy, Hakka food was introduced to Toronto. It was in the early 80s when we introduced Chili Chicken, Manchurian Chicken, Chili Shellless Shrimp and our Pakoras.

Here at Yueh Tung, we are honored to serve you all three styles of Hakka cuisine that our family was raised on: Traditional Hakka, Cantonese Hakka and Indian Hakka. As longstanding guests ourselves, we hope you as our guests, enjoy all the comfort foods that we’ve enjoyed for so long here at our family restaurant!
